2. Reason of the Revision and Future Correspondence

We expect the recovery trend in the electronics industry to continue in the future, but there is a risk that we will be forced to further accelerate the inventory adjustment phase if anxieties over the stagnancy of the US and European economies increase. If the yen appreciation, a trend that has rapidly progressed from this summer, continues in the future as well, it may affect the revenue of the Company group. In addition to these business circumstances, the conditions surrounding the Company group, such as the supply and demand trend in the CCFL business, are expected to become more uncertain. With regard to net sales for the full-year, we revise our forecast as stated above in consideration of the business conditions and the effect of the appreciated yen. With regard to income for the full-year, our forecast of operating income and ordinary income will remain unchanged from our previous announcement because the structural reforms we have been implementing are expected to produce effects, and our forecast of net income will be revised as stated above in consideration of the effect of the appreciated yen and the scheduled purchase of stock options of overseas subsidiaries.

In the future, the Company group will aggressively launch new products in growing markets such as the “eco-friendly and energy-saving markets” and “emerging country markets” in and around its core semiconductor device business. Demand for products for automobiles and white goods is expected to continue advancing, and firm sales of products for TVs is also assumed. The Company group will steadily exploit these movements for revenue and promote the structural reform such as the enforcement and reorganization of production systems while focusing on the curtailment of fixed costs. By steadily carrying out these measures, the Company group is determined to achieve the above forecast of the full-year business results.

We have no plan to revise our dividend forecast (3 yen for an interim dividend, 3 yen for a year-end dividend) in connection with the revision of the forecast of business results.
